

BABY POOP CHART

- LOOKS LIKE Molasses - black or green in color
- WHAT Baby's first poo, meconium, made of what was consumed in utero
- NORMAL? Yes, it's a sign everything is working properly

- LOOKS LIKE Custard or mustard - yellow and runny
- WHAT This is what the poo of a breastfed baby looks like
- NORMAL? Yes, it will continue to look like this until baby starts taking solid foods

- LOOKS LIKE Wholegrain mustard - dark yellow & grainy in texture
- WHAT Breastfed or bottle-fed babies' poo should look like this
- NORMAL? Yes

- LOOKS LIKE Dark mushy peas - greenish-brown
- WHAT This is what the poo of a breastfed baby looks like
- NORMAL? Yes, unless it's often and runny in texture - this could indicate diarrhea

- LOOKS LIKE Lumps of food
- WHAT When you first wean your baby, it will take time for them to adjust to digesting food
- NORMAL? Yes. Mashing foods can make it easier on their digestive system

- LOOKS LIKE Watery pea soup - green and frothy
- WHAT Result of too much lactose from foremilk instead of nutritious hind-milk
- NORMAL? Check with doc to rule out diarrhea. Ensure they're done feeding on one breast before moving on.

